

Cheltenham Adam Fieled

Preface

In the fall of 2011, I discovered something at a relative's apartment in Conshohocken I didn't know I still had— my high school yearbook. As it hadn't in 1994, it compelled me with emotions which ran the gamut, from curiosity to nostalgic tenderness to despair and bereavement. By 2011, I was only in touch with a handful of my graduating class, and those only online. There were some others I would sometimes see around Center City Philadelphia. The general sense I got was that by late 2011, the Cheltenham High School class of '94 was not doing well. All of us were at the mercy of a harsh economy; those who never had a strong life purpose to begin with were tempted to self-destruct absolutely. For the first time in seventeen years, I was on the same page with my fellow Cheltenham graduates— in the spring of '11, Temple had done a purge in the English department, and I (along with most of the other adjuncts) was, as they say, toast. My writing was a success, but it didn't pay much. I got familiar with unemployment compensation and waiting in long academic lines.

When I looked at the '94 yearbook, I noticed certain things which had escaped my attention then—like that I was edited out of most of it. Other seniors at image-conscious Cheltenham joined as many clubs and organizations as possible senior year so as to take up more yearbook space—I went the other way senior year, and offed myself. I despised Cheltenham, and was the James Dean of my class. I was also the best musician, and by the time I graduated my music (including songs I was already writing) had granted me a certain amount of prestige, both to my class and to the classes below ours. But the yearbook photographers avoided my poisonous rebelliousness like the plague. I was a yearbook ghost. Because I received the yearbook without reading it in '94, by '11 I was bemused to have played hookie from my own immolation. I also noticed that the superlatives page, never more than gauche in any yearbook, was so comically wrong in relation to how things turned out that seeing the attributions was like watching a particularly gruesome snuff flick or "Faces of Death." That was my feeling about Cheltenham— a conformist's paradise full of tiny, tidy dumpling bumpkins who invariably made an attempt to invert things from how they were to how they (and their parents) wanted them to be.

As I looked at my classmates, memories came rushing back of incidents and relationships I'd forgotten. What looked dark then looked even darker in '11. One relationship I had in high school seemed particularly significant to me in '11— a buddy I had named Chris, who was especially close to me senior year. Chris was a mysterious person with a fluctuating identity— he waffled between sports and music, between "jock" and artistic mentalities, without committing either way. There was a tremendous darkness in him about his family— an unavailable father (who settled with a new wife several states away), a hostile mother, and a brother he couldn't get close to. Chris expressed his rebelliousness in a manner more aggressive than I did— he stole, egged houses, drove in a heedless way, and stalked girls. By 2011, he was still leaving nasty comments on my Facebook posts. I had no idea how (or if) he was supporting himself. The important thing to me as an artist is that he was still waffling— he had never found a strong life's purpose. Only anger and destructive behavior made him feel alive. As Cheltenham Elegy #261 runs, he could only connect nothing with nothing. When we were young, I mistook Chris's rage for a kind of truthfulness. By 2011, all it looked like was a prop to make him seem human to himself.

The characters in the Cheltenham Elegies are all like that—they're all trying to seem human to themselves. They're rebelling against the inhumanity of the American suburbs, which is profound. The American suburbs make blandness a monster, and homogeneity a God— Cheltenham is no exception. The first section of this book are poems firmly and directly centered on Cheltenham as a locale; the second section mines similar turf in a more generalized way. The common denominator, for better or for worse, is darkness. It's easy to wonder how many Americans in 2011 could page through their high school yearbooks and feel anything but a pervasive sense of darkness; and it amazed me that, by '11, Cheltenham could be taken for an Everyplace in America.

Adam Fieled, 2013

Credits

Argotist Online Poetry— 702

As/Is— 421, 416, 213, 216, 413, 1653, 1314, 271, Addendum

Boog City— 415, 421

Decanto— 1644

denver syntax— 540, 554, 557, 563

Dirty Napkin—281

Fieled's Miscellaneous—268

Mad Hatter's Review— 414, 238

On Barcelona— 148

Otoliths— 1110, 1171, 1194, 1489, 147

Pressure Press— 415, 418, 102, 158

Quarter After— 261, 412, 151, 153

Real Poetik— 1200

Tears in the Fence—1632

The Seattle Star— 524, 420

Truck— 1112

I. Cheltenham Elegies

Never one to cut corners about cutting corners, you spun the Subaru into a rough U-turn right in the middle of Old York Road at midnight, scaring the shit out of this self-declared "artist." The issue, as ever, was nothing particular to celebrate. We could only connect nothing with nothing in our private suburban waste land. Here's where the fun starts— I got out, motherfucker. I made it. I say "I," and it works. But Old York Road at midnight is still what it is. I still have to live there the same way you do.

Each thinks the other a lonesome reprobate. That's what I guess when I see the picture. It's Elkins Park Square on a cold spring night; they're almost sitting on their hands. One went up, as they say, one went down, but you'll never hear a word of this in Cheltenham. They can't gloat anymore, so they make an art of obfuscation. That's why I seldom go back. Elkins Park Square is scary at night. There are ghosts by the ice skating rink.

#414

And out of this nexus, O sacred scribe, came absolutely no one. I don't know what you expected to find here. This warm, safe, comforting suburb has a smother button by which souls are unraveled. Who would know better than you? Even if you're only in the back of your mind asphyxiating. He looked out the window— cars dashed by on Limekiln Pike. What is it, he said, are you dead or do you think you're Shakespeare?

Huddled in the back of a red Jetta, I thought we were in a Springsteen song. But there are no backstreets in Cheltenham.
It's only the strip-mall to house and back circuit. Anyone could've seen us. It wasn't a full consummation—for want of a graceful phrase, we were too smart to fuck. There was no playing hero for me. Nor did I force you to confess. What could you say?
Cheltenham was soft, and all too infested.

Why, as I climb Old York Road, the bridge is a foreboding one—thousands here hurled from pitiless heights, as was decided each time by casual stooges, whose own eventual, catastrophic deaths were not faced by themselves or anyone else: Kabuki puppet deaths, Old York Road another puppet stage.

Past midnight, into the early morning: nothing for you to paint here. Just that sense, from the front seat of an old Volkswagon, of what worlds can never change for people like us. What soothes & slays is the same thing: things in real life get stuck, for better or worse, & peace is all in being willing to stick, too. Right?

Even as a little girl, she got beat down. There was something wrong with her brains. She couldn't relate to people. Cheltenham guys noticed how adorably doll-like she was (lookin' real good, like Natalie Wood), but she wouldn't date anyone. She died a mysterious social drowning death. She got older and became a Tennessee Williams heroine-as-Jewess. I'm telling you this because I nailed her, dude. I got her to give me a blowjob.

There's something sweet and sickly about teenagers fucking. Even laid down by the jagged rocks that bordered Tookany Creek. I think of them there, and know he's getting wasted. What's draining out of him is the will to live. She always gets him off somehow. Then they would walk over to the Little League field and huddle in the dugout. He didn't even wind up graduating from Cheltenham on time. I can't get over thinking who he could've been. Am I the only one?

It's two in the morning—this big empty field is a vacuum sucked into this little girl's mouth. Everything's little, he thinks. At least I'm big enough to get head. The problem is what she wants from me. And what she's bound to get. Just by chance, someone in a passenger seat in a car going by on Church Road sees the outline of the two figures. One is leaning—the blowjob part isn't visible. Wow, he says; this place is strange. He shakes himself, turns up the music, and gets ready for a long ride.

#213

You and your proud working-class ethos. You, sitting at your laptop, spying on me on Facebook, jerking your parts off. Go ahead and pass on that shipment: you'll get a cut. You're no beauty school dropout, hanging around the corner store. You need to know: when they do make me into a ragdoll, you'll get one of the first batch. You can wring me out, slam me down on your linoleum floor, bite my head to your heart's content.

I was too stoned to find the bathroom. The trees in the dude's backyard made it look like Africa. You were my hook-up to this new crowd. The same voice, as always, cuts in to say you were fucked up even then. You had a dooming Oedipal complex. We were all wrapped tight, even when we got high. I was the only one getting any, so you both mistrusted me. African trees & easy camaraderie. A primitive pact sealed between warring factions— my spears (take this as you will) for your grass.

You can force your pen into a cat's anus for all I care, she told him. October sunlight hit the grimy pavement as if directed by Rocky Balboa himself. The Art Museum, he thinks, is mostly crap but its still imposing—what man has made of man, fodder for giftshops. His working life is a gift-shop too—no one buys anything. If he did force his pen into a cat's anus, they'd probably arrest him for animal abuse. Maybe he'll pretend that she's a cat. Ring the bell for round two, please.

Picture this: thirty kids in a two-story house in the Poconos. They're little bandits. Their parents think they're somewhere else. It's the popular crew: but half the baseball stars are homosexuals, half the cheerleaders want to be housewives, and the football guys are putting on five pounds a day. They have to carry little Roberta outside for some fresh air; she's drunk, got ditched by a wide receiver. She looks at the mountain stars, thinks (her friend imagines) nothing thoughts about nothing. Eighteen years later: one of the homosexual baseball stars is now at a mountain retreat in the Poconos. He gets carried out by his lover to look at the stars, drunk on Mimosas. Nothing gets thought about nothing again. What do I think? I'm writing a letter to Nietzsche. Ask him.

Your skin hangs around you like an old lady's loose gown. You used to live a dynamic double life, with constituents coming out of your ass from three schools. No one anywhere knew quite who you were. Now, I hesitate to state anything for the record these guys are recording. The whole process creeps me out. I sat in the back of the Subaru while they egged somebody's house, or he took a handful of CDs from Tower Records, placed them under his sweater or into his boxers. What I tell them is the truth: there was too much in you that you never even knew about. You were a mystery to yourself. You were the kid at the bowling alley trying to hook up with the twins, or the obsessive devotee of another head-case. Now, I'm a head-case who knows the same thing is true about me, and if my skin is tautened it stings.

#448

I was talking to the thin air twenty years ago, but I still say it: for all the constituents you had coming out of your ass, poke a hole in you, there's nothing there. Wall Park that night was desolate as ever, the moon bothered to hover bemusedly above, all the rest. Out on the four-square field of grass which bluntly, flatly dominates the stupid place, an act was performed that made your life as completely a parody as slamming back rancid milk. She seems to have forgotten you, I thought. The drive-by guys were surprised, to say the least, as was I, drunk on stolen beer. They were, too.

#418

I remember thinking: boy do I feel Wild at Heart tonight. What a joke—this horrible Cheltenham bitch with a huge nose tries to generate an orgy in her basement. The pot was alright, at least. But Elkins Park gave us the creeps, and we agreed afterwards never to go back. The fucked up thing about that night for me in particular was knowing we would have fun talking about it forever. And we have, so I guess it's not a complete dead loss. The girl I was with pretended I was fucking her, too.

I.

The Junior Prom deposited me (and fifteen others) on the floor of her basement. I could barely see daylight at the time, and at three in the morning I began to prowl. I was too scared to turn on any lights. She emerged like a mermaid from seaweed. I needed comfort, she enjoyed my need. We had gone out—she was bitter. The whole dialogue happened in shadows. No one was hooking up in the other room, either. You spiteful little princess.

II.

Whether off the bathroom counter or the back of your hand, darling, your unusual vehemence that winter night, cob-webbed by half-real figures, was animated by an unfair advantage, which stooges threw at you to keep you loopy as you died piece-meal. All I had was incomprehensible fury and a broken heart— when I hit the floor at four, you were getting ready to play fire-starter, opened the little snifter, curled your finger twice in the right direction; darkness—

Addendum: #420

The craftier angle to hear them: hover in the doorway, in total darkness, hands held behind your back. She takes a stand against him in the shadows, as her lover flails, barefoot on carpeting: jabs, another—these two miserable adolescents, tokens of the dirge that was this tepid Philly 'burb, clown choruses pining for images, curbed words replaced with scripts, minds unbroken finally meeting ends in winter rain, soaking, drenched with venom against the Solid. What to look for: register his life-force energies against hers, for the first course her rhetoric takes against him, her stolid defiance, sharply defined, against knowledge that she's veered over into eerie wilderness. It's true, the abyss laughs around her, & him, but she's slightly more bound up in it, thinned, bruised beneath surfaces to embrace the abyss, all he needs is a caress given really, a kiss—he won't get it. What he'll get is the meaning of the surface she's chosen: bone, dust, webs. Yet they stand exalted as they taste the dregs—someone's watching elsewhere, & scheming. Transmutation must happen, past dreaming—that spirit, against the animal, is real in them.

The doorway is hinged to show you two souls—unvarnished, electric, whether riddled with holes or not, & love of a kind is being made, & gems.

The craftiest angle is not you, if you will, but them—

#702

His heart ached within a drowsy, numbed trance.

Cameras panned to him pacing the black-top, even blacker at 3 am, which opens out on the expanse of Mill Road, down the hill, past the school. Night deepened, he was lonely enough to cry, heartsick for being the only one of a scabrous tribe gutsy enough to say the name which even then had rent Cheltenham, riddled with bullets like a dog's corpse, assassins fleeing the site of the hit, where the one kid, bound for fame, did for himself the trick of ditching a tepid middle.

He levitates past himself, flies with bugs into crevices, is the pilot of the few airplanes wafting by, Pegasus-like for a mind intent on flight, meeting divinity, heaven's bliss from a cockpit. Myers' schoolyard glistens like spikes. She knew him then, at her end—saw how the spine imposed truth on empty gesture, feeling on pretense, vital life on the living death of their shared enterprise. This, he could never know; yet without knowing how, why, he strode past her emptied house that night, tense, sweating in summer's stew, pallid in cold surprise.

The apostate flies around a small room, piles of books, papers scattered, forests of drafts, faintly heard bird-song. Verdurous plains suggest themselves; moss-softened nooks; just out of time, to a mind o'er spelled by word-song. He can only fly as he reads, over & over, the lays already fastened to moss & flower, secured above shallow stream. His friend waits, in stealth.

The early morning ride he caught then, from love given, wasn't her— she had gone the way there is no coming back— yet he slept himself back to health.

When he drives around Elkins Park in the dead of night, he thinks, this is how I like the human race— asleep. When three roads fork at Myers, he goes down Mill Road. By the time the car climbs Harrison Ave, he has the thought that the sleeping human race is the holy one. He pushes past the old derelict high school on High School Rd, wonders if its still haunted. It flashes on him: the day he broke in, smack in the middle of the Nineties, with buddies now long dead. He found a hammer, stole it, never used it— it sat in his closet until after graduation. He was smashed then, too.

She put down the coffee cup and started to tear up. Jesus, you can't even take her to Starbucks. He leaned into his pumpkin scone. The barista was cute, and she was shooting him a look. Myers. He remembered passing it once. There was a glare off the blacktop (or something) that hurt his eyes. So one of her old friends died. They used to hang out there. Etcetera. And now this. The barista herself thought, that callous prick. He's like a little kid.

#268

Satin blouses, trinkets (some kind of jade pendant), & the big trinket between her legs that nobody gets to play with.

Rare meat. She's been babied by her parents since her birth (Rabbit year, a juxtaposition more sad than ironic), and suddenly I can teach her something?

And I thought of what she was telling herself in response, and the words came to me, "I'm doing this because I promised, my Mom wants me to do this, now I promised, I have to do this."

I.

The Junior Prom deposited her into a crawl space. He took liberties with her— hands all over the place. Now, she was trapped in a basement with him, the whole gang, there to reinforce the rightness of being top dogs in the class, which they (as she knew) only half were. Like a mermaid from seaweed, she rose to lock herself in the bathroom, pill up. He was human seaweed to her, sequestered with the boys on the opposite side of the basement. The crash was heavy— when she woke, it was almost noon, most of the gang gone. They'd spited her.

II.

They were washed up on a shore. Bonded against an impostor who had briefly been among them (Roberta threw a party at his house, when he lived in a rich one), they could only be semi-stooges until they got him out somehow. A hands-on treatment, he thought, is what the situation calls for; I'm the exorcist here. You knew who's being cast out. No huddling in the dugout, no getting him off, no frolicking by Tookany Creek. Me. I'm who you're looking for. He repeated it to himself, even as she slept, far away. The fire of it ravished the basement.

"Do I get to be the Friday night Lady in Black? Do I get to molest little boys in bunk beds? You can take your pathetic baby games, give 'em to your wetback pony friends in Shitville, for all I care." That's where the tape in her head ends, as it is Friday night, and she's going nowhere near those sleaze-ball sons of bitches. She forces herself to vomit up an ice-cream cone. She sends a one-liner out to one of her text-lists—she's wearing a black dress in her soul. She has no initials. They sit at the same pub on Limekiln Pike and reminisce. Have they ever wondered how he feels? They don't realize he's driving past, and looks in and sees them there. He still wants in, and pretends not to. The sun set over Glenside an hour ago. He pretends to his family, always, that he has some where to go, but he doesn't: he just likes to drive. The old crew, the popular girls of '95, are just as senseless, as they drive their minds backwards, he thinks. He's still a virgin, and desperate. The business works the same everywhere.

When she starts at Rizzo's, winds her way around to Easton Road on Saturday night, it's with full control, absolute mastery— here's where Glenside stands, where it's going, here's why. The game continues over to Limekiln Pike— Wawa, Tail of the Whale. Not just the surface, but who's hiding where, with what, & again why. Yet deep in her heart, the ultimate why, life or death in a sense of purpose, remains barren. The spider in the glass case, frozen in the Humphrey's Pest Control window, is to the point— Humphrey's never answers anyway— the spider tells her where the real action is. Then the beauty of it— her sacrifice to/for Glenside— becomes just another heist in the world. Limekiln Pike is too steep to climb.

It's Friday night, and she's going nowhere near those ass-fucking sons of bitches. She forces herself to vomit up an ice-cream cone. If she walks past Burholme Park, of course he'll be there, right there among them. It's not just that she expected more—she banked her whole life on him having a little class. Over at Burholme, they've got splendor going in the grass. Nothing can bring back the casual hours. Though it's past dark, kids are still driving putts. The guys wonder whether they'll get hit.

They told me later; she was afflicted with shortness of breath. I held down what I held down from the portal-way of PNC Bank. When she stepped into Easton Road, I had to object. From the wee hours of a night in late spring, the gauntlet I laid down was the standard one. It's just that my guy at the Glenside Septa Station across the street developed a fixation, because she showed up again a week later, wheezing. Now, I have no choice but to establish: nobody fucked her, OK? I didn't, he didn't, my idiot stepbrother didn't, & you didn't either, you moron. Jesus. You act like you've never seen a blonde before. Now we're short of breath—

I.

Out past the Septa station, Easton Road turns residential. They had Pilot A on patrol last night, & our prize partridge manifested before him there in tee & panties. Did he do something? He did. Suffice it to say, the current situation came up, & they confirmed an unholy alliance I need hardly enumerate, except to note that by our standards, he fucked her all night long. The PNC morons still say they fucked her, too. The patrol moving in to sub for them... cocks out. Meanwhile, the blonde (ours) shifted back to Elkins Park for some reason, so that the Glenside marriage can go on, & won't put her clothes back on before dawn.

II.

She resents Glenside for turning everything into a porno. She likes the ice skating rink, she thinks to herself. She likes Elkins Park Square, chaste after midnight—ghouls, goblins. That's where, they hear, she is—Wall Park to the Square & back, carrying him around in her guts. Needless to say, they don't like him much here. Somebody left a key bloodstain on a rock by the creek, a razor on a swing. Dark times for her, who's trying the two-house life, or, as they call it in Glenside, fucking the zig-zag pig. She pledges allegiance to the zig-zag. He watches her from a distance, wood hidden. Others, he sees, are more obvious.

"That Natalie Wood asshole was just in here, now I have to do clean-up. I want you to know that you can't just get blowjobs on our watch without bringing in your own clean-up people. This is the last time I'm willing to do this for you guys."

He shuffles out of there, even more conceited than he should be, he thinks, because he has her house staked out, the whole nine yards, & an in to show up in her room, get real the right way, as she also does, as he's never done. If it's not too real for you, he'll say, pistol half-concealed.

It's Friday night (Saturday morning), they're going very near her indeed. Having (as they watched) scrawled an oh-so-despairing missive to one of her girlfriends, she stripped down to her panties (they snickered), took too many pills, and was now comatose on a bed that clearly hadn't been made in weeks. What they bothered to ricochet over to Burholme was simple—this one's not a problem. Agree with her, flatter her sense that she's a sage, not a whiner (Cassandra, one of the guys thinks), she'll fuck you all night long, too. They've noticed, from Cheltenham, both here, in Glenside & Elkins Park, it's been a summer of blondes—they all think they're special, want special lives. This one gives the loudest screech, and has (they can't resist) the biggest jugs. Her dude is in the pocket, under us.

The drive that matters, the money drive, always puts his head (finally) in a groovy place. He's parked in the Wawa lot; the sign's been given, he won't be molested. Good old Heather, Miss F, from a class above him at CHS, just walked in & out without buying anything, in a brown raincoat, so he knows: Rizzo's is in on things tonight. You're not, he knows, supposed to equate dealing with the oneness of the universe, but he does, because, although it's a bit chillier than it should be, he's got his cock out for Heather forever. The pills kicked in. The car's solid. Rizzo's has both of their backs. And, most sublimely of all, he's not needed on Easton Road at all tonight. His racket stays on Limekiln. He'll stay high, in peace, with homeboys here, too.

She had the kid, no one knew—he didn't either, the putz. She was apparently in a Puerto Rican mood. He didn't realize the whole West Side Story enterprise was going on behind his back, and I went crazy, watching the dance spectacle. I can't not think it's funny now, her still sitting on the fence, as if she could look normal there, as if what she does in Center City could still ricochet to us as something that matters. I'm only bringing this up because she was in Jenkintown last night to see a movie, with some other new putz-guy she has around. She gave my scout something to give to me, and I liked it, her being a Jet all the way. We gave her limited privileges with our sheets in Center City. Another putz, or him again, no kid.

I.

The spook she was—he suspected, as they rose to leave her, that she'd not only never left Cheltenham, but that she was chiding him personally for not having resolved the general mess in a sanitized package. As they turned onto Easton Road, he finally said what he had to say out loud. Then, he declared himself exonerated—there was no mess for him. He wanted to live in a real action place, one that mattered in the world—he got his wish. The jalopy was spotted from 7-11, headed back towards Wyncote. They awaited her signal, as she rose to leave, which came in a 30% tip, in cash.

II.

Church Road back past Wyncote, towards Elkins Park, he had some things to say right back. The real action you were looking for came at a cost, OK? Because now, when we go out, we attract spooks. You don't know what might've happened when we left, but I'm sure it wasn't nice. He stopped, then, thinking of a picture which had become famed in their circle—the pariah and the high priest. The pariah was their responsibility. The high priest was at the bottom of a bunch of seas. He said, it turned out badly, OK? I want to say, for the record, that your sense of being exonerated is a bullshit one. Now, we're criminals too. It turned out badly.

Knives thrust into wooden tables at the drop of a name—factions squaring off, bedraggling an endless summer—here they sat at the Glenside Pub, securely fastened to life or otherwise, glared down the throats of their enemies, into their lagers. Nick, C.J. and the rest were telling stories. It was Jeremy, they said, who was covered in leeches, like me. I had hijacked his potency, mojo, what have you. Stop midflight, adjust the altitude, right? Spreadsheets held their own knives. Step back, Jack. C.J. towers (he thinks), Nick dazzles (he thinks), puddings' right there, chumps. The blonde (his) leers. Easton Road chokes all over again. He steers.

Knives thrust into wooden tables gave Nick a misty-eyed look— as was later learned, he was stealing again. Too many secret alliances, too many mystifications, Nick that summer was securely fastened to nothing. He was the kind of guy who liked to think of nothing as something solid, himself the master of a solid kind of nothing, manifested by him, whatever spreadsheet was up. A dead duck's a dead duck, dazzling or not. He'll never mistake himself for flesh & blood (invert), never protect himself falsely (invert), never ask how he got to the places he may arrive at. I thought I knew then where he was. But he got caught.

I.

Beheaded? A contestant on Wheel of Fortune, to see how much of his soul he can singe in one night: beheaded? All because I wouldn't save him. Not that it was my responsibility to do so (car turns onto Harrison Avenue, parks). The encampment area at the corner of Harrison & Limekiln shows off, at this time of night, the monstrosity, Glenside Elementary, as an act of architectural vandalism; my miserable wife won't talk to me, at first blood she starts to wheeze, I (the king) can't help her either, because I (the king) am a peon here. It flew off with the first birds of dawn, and with Nick's blood-soaked head on a pike: my soul. Now, for eighteen months, it's gone.

II.

Halfway over the Atlantic Ocean, there it was, affixed to the cockpit's glass to deliver a Lenny Bruce-ian monologue: Nick's severed head. How nice of you to show up, Nick, but I have a responsibility here, these people's lives are all depending on me, so... the nose knows. What the nose knows, the nose knows, but what you don't know the nose knows, is how you smell to me, and your past smells like ass, for real. He knows, he's not only not supposed to sweat, he's supposed to manifest nothing but the most masterful ten-hour coolness. He does, but only through years of rigorous practice. His insides are not as numb as they were when the whole sword-blade heist happened; everything in him stews. Glenside Elementary re-delivers to him its terrible news.

From the angle the bathroom door was left ajar, the Pub crowd knew (it was a flag) someone had fallen. The inside crowd, drunk on heat, wasted on weed, saw the evidence, guessed (correctly) it was Nick. Heat trailed in from Easton Road, numbness built in the crowd, the door was slammed shut, as participants in the madness tried (shakily, achingly) to sleep the thing off, somewhere else. Ricochets from Limekiln Pike, the usual, but with another flag that someone at Wawa was gloating again. Ensigns as the sun went down, but Nick would never be there again. The crowd knew him to be irreplaceable, sans any sense of caring, though others might cry on the inside.

From the angle the bathroom door got re-opened, they laughed, the sunset crew, gearing up for a night of TV, maybe the Phillies. The score was known, yet one of them went for a walk, all the way to 7-11, just to taste something else, he thought. They'd be missing in action for while, that crew, if he read right. He looked across the street at West Coast Video, thought of Nick. He'd been in a room once with Nick, watching a movie. Nightmare on Elm Street? When someone has to end that way... he can't finish the thought. Later that night, he just understands something, about life, about Glenside, about drugs, about all of it, which seems simple but isn't—it can only be good if you stay yourself, like Nick. Amen.

Tail of the Whale watched him, sitting in the little Honda, outside Wawa, & laughed. She grew even more exuberant when he got to see Heather sashay in & out, attired for an earlier season on a rainy night. This guy, she thought, is one of my brothers, I like to see him around when I can, even if we're two ships passing in the night. She stands in the light drizzle, in the parking lot, smoking a butt, reminiscing to herself about when they all used to meet at Glenside Elementary on sultry days, do whatever in endless summers. She doesn't think, she knows: things go round in endless circles; one of the circles has to be God, right?

Look: we had a guy planted on the Wall Park side of the creek for the entire night. You want to tell us that you can just knock a guy off in front of him, & us, without us getting upset—that's a no can do. You saw him yourself: he's tough, he can take care of himself, he's an OK trooper. But "We refuse to take dumb risks right now because things are getting bloody, & we chose a side, OK? The extra three hours were unacceptable, so if you want to make it up to us, we'll ask you to do it right here, right now. You spend three hours in our tank, or we cut the lines. And no bitching, & we say who's accounted for, & you don't."

Later, he stood his ground in a fenced-in courtyard adjacent to Glenside Elementary, for precisely three hours. Department store dummies did their dance, he fended them off like they were dilettantes, which they were. He thought that night there was something metaphysical about what it meant to be accounted for. Did God watch?

Black Rainbow ruled the roost then. That night they played in Ambler, we tried to find the Ambler Cabaret, wound up at Reed's Country Store in Blue Bell. So: Reed's Country Store shows up at PNC to re-divorce someone she never married, with Elkins Park tales & torments, & we all go down the slippery slope towards recaptured virginity. The ricochet receives the ring; Wall Park gets to stop & toke up; Glenside groans under packages it can only half-carry; we have to get our jollies throwing darts at her metaphoric, wicker-wrought spread. The Jetta, a manual, got totaled a long time ago. Shifting gears: the Broad Axe Tavern awaits— why we have a special Manhattan mixed for her, God knows.

I.

Drunken antics in the Poconos, the letter dictated itself. They played tennis, when they were little kids. She stopped the game to deliver a speech just to him, for him. This is who we could be somewhere else, she said. This is who we could be here. I had to remind him that he was sitting in a gay bar with a bunch of queers, who were playing their own tennis games. Thanks for that serve, he said. Another winner. We kicked his ass out. So, no more walking through the park and reminiscing, OK? Please remind all the boys that you must ask permission to say sporty things, or sport around with having a straight past. Please.

II.

Roberta was strung out on me, he inscribed. I was a guy she used to fuck, & when we fucked, she got strung out on me. I was a hard case, she was a bunch of rungs above, but she let me string her up nonetheless. She thought I was beautiful. Why it matters, why I sit here writing this, is because I was asleep the whole time, cresting on a wave into nothingness, & I never realized that to be that far into someone has to ricochet internally, & if it doesn't I find myself again to be the head-case I don't want to be. Or maybe the head-case writing this has now wandered into a life as merciless as a slew of fags dissecting Clint Eastwood movies, but remembers the things he remembers.

I.

As I watched him fly commercial airliners over the North American continent, try his hand at farming, bide miserable time in Glenside like he'd never left, he was the man who would be king. No one needs to remind us about his developed spine, quick-minded reactions; yet the heart part went missing, & he didn't find it in the cockpit or the hay-stacks. In Glenside, as in all other places, we saw what we saw: if you can't hang, you hang. He was missing when we all finally got high in peace.

II.

What I learned: the kingdom of heaven is right there in the sky. If you can make a steady course through heaven, no one can hold back the earth itself anointing you king. The chickens & pigs know it, too. The soil knows it. Even good-old deadbeat Easton Road, still as a graveyard at 3 am, knows it, delivers a positive verdict. Somewhere there's a man (that's me) who unites heaven & earth, a hierophant, & the king among hierophants can kick righteous ass shoving the whole enterprise into motion. I am the king who not only hangs in heaven, but can hang heaven up wherever I go.

All piled into the house on Woodlawn. They had me do all the old jokes, as though I were a wind-up toy. Most of them had never been in the house before. It was about to be abandoned anyway; but my mind still clings to it. I smoked pot there for the first time. I got on the road to my first hook-up at a party, & I punched a Hulk Hogan poster's crotch. Now even this pile-up was fifteen years ago. The shed in the back was filled with smoke, as were we—

& no one who was there that night, high, hasn't been abased. Wisdom has its palaces that look more like park benches. Youth's privilege is to be in love with life. I was in love with life that night, too—the crush of strange kids in an Abington house, movements towards more weed. We sat on a curb and planned more mischief. The Universe had some mischief planned for us, too. For those of us who live on the curb and nowhere else— a requiem.

Revolution, turmoil, discord—but the economy for those nights, Cheltenham-Abington, was about something you & yours never cared for. If you were us, which you were not, you put having a good time at the top of the economy. North-East hi-jinx, start at the bowling alley on Rising Sun Avenue, back into Cheltenham, pick up the twins, then, of course, it's already time to smoke up. And so on, for the rest of the night. The crest of the wave didn't crash 'til Willow Grove. Crank up WDRE because they're standing right in front of us. We're everywhere. Brixton watches, carrying a guitar. You there?

II. More Apparition Poems

The guy with the hedge-clipper had a heart attack at the train station and died, that's what they said. I only saw him a few times, I wish I knew more, he had skin always tanned, weather-beaten, in fact that's how I remember him, as always looking beaten, but his kids were obnoxious, now they have to move. I'm looking forward to seeing who moves in next door, because the guy before also had a heart attack and died. What is it about this street, he thinks as he hangs up the cell phone; what needs clipped? There were three clues placed in his path that night, that were stones in his pathway. The first was a one-life bitch talking about hierarchies of gender. The second was a minor poet doing histrionics which needn't be enumerated. The third was a brutal rapist that jumped off the Golden Gate Bridge, but failed to fall all the way down. All these clues led him to sit in coffee-shops, bars, nightclubs, looking for souls to confide in about that night, how vacant the roads were, how deep the moon was set in heaven. He had waited, just as they said. At the appointed time, he had seen what he was supposed to see. The problem was, seeing this made him unhappy enough that he walked away from the road and the three clues, never came back. Now, here he was. The coffee was taken black.

Poets are boring people, she said, because they want to fuck words more than they want to fuck. I said, I like fucking people as much as I like words. You're no poet, she said, unzipping me. I passed on pieces of a universe where the down places go up. When I hurled, it landed in a heap at her feet. It was both red and white, together from senses of a lost cross between us. I sputtered out. Is this what you've come to, she said, spitting. I couldn't speak from being rolled. I crumpled, threw in my hand, betted on being home by four a.m. Feeling rumpled, ten-sheeted, I gave her tattoo a fling. She told me her changed plans. It ended in drinks poured down like so many rain-buckets. I was waiting for a charge, & when it came, said to her, don't fake me out, or even try, I see your deal, and I'm leaving now, to which she flamed, blared teal. Abalone.

I leaned on my dashboard hands, propped myself up for the surge, sparked as I plugged away, Vulcan at a soot-scummy forge, beneath me

Venus thinking of grey pigmentation, behind the wheel the music blared, I went through the light into the wash, but came out more dirty than I was when I entered: smudged coal, rubber. Were we covered? The Venusian you were could only jealously repeat what you'd already said. More work for Vulcan.

In the dream I lied, I said I wasn't going to make a pass, then I cast my arms around you (slinky black dress), held you close to me (wall length windows around), we buttered in, when I woke I saw you, your Polynesian sister, you cried in the dream, it wasn't you, tears like sea-weed—

I have always wanted to drink your blood; all these long years I have waited to taste it mixed in red wine, in a silver chalice, quick flick of a dagger at our wrists, communion of a dark hue, eye and you—ensorcelled to love & die. Death between us can't not be a kind of feast.

As the next level or layer is shed, it's inverse onions. I'll keep your blood around my neck if you will mine.

Your voice came through her (I heard it distinctly, how you curl around your vowels), then I knew that the voice you gave me (silvery, icicle smooth) was false, that it had all been a ruse— the deeper layer is between you two, I'm a cardboard cut-out. I'm a big advertisement for my own rod, not much else, but we've been here for years, with pretenses that these things have to happen, & they don't.

The male as pathetic—the voice with useless grain in it. I want you to see how hungry I am, right? Not just to be in you, but to settle as something concrete in your guts. But the authority is in the icicles.

"Oh for the sentience of books, Kant once said, or should have, and if he didn't it is difficult for me to accept his critiques, as they hinge on acknowledgements of inward sentience of beings, and books are beings, even as they are-in-the-world. As for this, this is action poetry, but I have no intention of driving my car into a tree, unless I feel the tree has so much sentience I would benefit from the action, & I don't doubt that this could be the case."

Bandaged head, nine staves, I'm the guy that can take it forever, I come up in your reading at the top of the cross, drop the staves on your candle, & as the reading ends: she takes the one stave I need the most, to tie the thing up, at the crosses' bottom— what comes to pass, unfortunately, is the same silly explosion we always come to, as the two fools pitch off the cliff, nipped at at the heels by the one you call dog, but who may not be, also as usual. The cards' orgasm is laughter—

I.

"Fuck art let's dance" only we didn't dance, we fucked, and when we fucked, it was like dancing, and dancing was like art, because the climax was warm, left us wanting more—how can I know this dancer from the dance? Brain-brightening glance, how tight the dance was, and the sense that pure peace forever was where it had to end for both of us, only your version was me dead, after I had permanently died inside you like the male spider always does—

II.

Pull me towards you woven color patterns create waves beneath us, tears buoy bodies to a state beyond "one" into meshed silk webs—not every pull is gravitational—as two spiders float upwards,

I say to you (as we multiply beyond ourselves) "those two are a bit much, their sixteen legs making love"

Her money, she repeats to herself, connects her to the whole world. She still sashays into Joan Shepp on Walnut, even if she can't buy anything. The fabrics, the cuts of the dresses—this is who she is.

Somewhere in the back of her mind, she knows she's been tossed like a rogue piece of fabric, & the hands that cut her have made her inelegant. To handle this cloth with dishrag hands, is to wade knee-deep into the darkness of the suburbs, frozen like jell-o around her.

to make love is to be taught, over & over again, how far into each other we can go, but you, who failed my class, must be taught, over & over again, how to pass into real ecstasy (these unholy caresses): wake up, wake up, the bells!

& as she glides down Pine Street, stars are joined by the moon & sun, begin a dance on the shore of this corner (13th), blue-black, orbs wedging crystals between us—

This I tell you—you can live or die, a tramp or sage, planted in sand or earth, I will rot in earth, still-birthed, blues will taste black in you, like asphalt.

In the pregnant pause between your mouth's movement and a gush of thick metrics, I had a vision of sun-dappled red hair that must have been yours, because we were in a forest. Since it was 1918, I did not have a stun-gun to plummet it back to the grungy soulmorass from which it hung but the forest's frail pomp brought green into mistletoe so that the kiss came out kid. Your game; every moved piece moves me. Every dive on/off board is a snap-tailed fish. More than ducks & fishes, we are two checkered pieces. There is no mate to be checked, but a deck to be cut (I say this because if I've got game, I've got you, your tails). Yet we play in a not-empty stadium, & one who watches knows what we're doing. Pieces are being thrown onto the field to confuse us. All this, as if, right? We're lost; we both lose. Or, someone needs to put us back in the ocean again, where we can pass for at least half-normal—alone together, in pieces ourselves, but game—

Your position's on waves, on fish, on the whole question of ocean, I said. Especially considering your taste for red snapper. It was her belly that flopped onto mine, in such a way that when the waves rose, they hit us so that the mast held us both up. Well, she said, if you threw out your fucking metaphors, you'd see I was buck naked.

Yes, I say, you can have this sweat being exhaled as when I loitered nightly for a kiss, but could taste a little phlegm; but you don't hear.

I'm sad as it's like a dream in which we can't touch. I strike in mad trance, knife unsheathed, plunged down the throat of your bed. Waves of sweat:

look, I say, you just got fucked but not over; almost, at least, as though we were eighteen again, dry humping bodies metaphor for a realer reality.

I'm learning that the taste of shit is spiritually rewarding, because humility is endless, your cunt really isn't.

my life is so insane, I live on a thin silver edge like a crescent moon—it is necessary we fight for things not naturally given, or provisionally—we reconnect our nerves, blue, red, multiple streams run between us, nothing left to say, as we pierce into animal existence on a freeway's rapid dawncampus: she's in an elevator, mascara-face, beady blue eyes, clothes emphasize her figure; she is being told about "illicit sex with Julia" in a classic:

she saw it happen, wants two razors to slash our wrists, we got away with it (it was obvious, SO obvious) behind accents that scream North-East Philly, I derive this lesson: if you've got to fool around, at least kill an idiot in the process. She is far gone into her own un-nested sense of being done. I can't go on as one, she said; deep dirt is dredged from depths of us, can't be kissed. She left her regrets. I tied one on.

How it ends: tied to an old oak, because what's in the ground is solid (as only death can be). I'm the muck by the riverbanks before the trees. But this landscape is surreal, grey, the wrong way.

She goes to a lake, thinks of me there, looks into copses, breathes in forests, sleeps in log cabins, picks flowers, early autumn quivers, & waits to be told by sprung nature what she already knows; there's no getting out of this one, for either of us— not this love. It's just that the ideals are now laid to rest, of who we could've been all around, as the decent citizens we wanted to be. Mauve sunrise, exquisite, that's in the bank; but we know now what isn't; & the bank's composition.

The truth of things is a snuff flick; each day we are impaled and impaling, razor sharp, red-spattered, phantom yellow eyes peeking through bedroom windows; this angle is, if our doors were cleansed, much more ultimate than graces and angels; the truth of blood, subtle destruction, everyone implicated, everyone culpable.

God is an amusement park (among other things) filled with rides, clowns, hot dogs, beer, circus mirrors, bearded ladies, strong men, log flumes, curious tourists (who have flown here all the way from Vermont), jaded locals (who sit in corners, smoking), and, ultimately, commodity-crazed business men, who honestly think they believe, live on their knees, yet cast twenty-foot arms into multiple pockets.

The encounter-poem came like this: she came at me with a genital-jab, then an uppercut aimed at my intellect, sucker-punched my art and, when I was prostrate, fished me out of my pants, rode herself silly.

She asked me how I did it, I turned my arm over, said look at these veins, I write with them, they are a well, she said well that's all very dramatic, but those veins should be used for life—if your blood is working double-time, your heart will only get half of what it needs. She hurt me, I said leave my blood alone, you can never understand, but her full house beat my flush—

This is a dominant stream, meant to flow through minds with channels I can tweak— think of yourself as you might stand before seven cups, point only if you must, but shrouded girls with raised arms, jewels, castles, and snakes may be better guides, I'm just the hollowness of sea-shells, in which you might hear how forces wave into flesh, what roars come from salt-water—the man recedes, the over-soul ascends.

So much richness reduced to a book taken from this shelf. All passion conduced to no end but what exists in her mind alone, truth burned off in erratic myths she made up to make off with a piece of my cake. So easy to make her break, if I cared enough to try, yet there'd be no reason why I should, after eight years. She took it off: it was here. It's nothing.

Desperation is the need to be loved sans reason, & I can't stop you either, so I'll be happy to watch as you dig a grave of ignorance—someday you'll hate me, but I have no other way to love—

she crawled down the stairs at 4 a.m. to smoke a Marlboro Red in peace, out on the porch, knowing tomorrow she'd outshine those dimwitted stars, cracked & fractured from overuse, in a pie-high sky—

To wake in darkness with a voice you can hear as hers— sense fiery angels spraying colors on two nude bodies— I'm hung on angels' wings, my mind vacillates, what happens does so as I bifurcate between her, angels, as I channel this tableaux she absorbs into a test she passes me on.

Teeth, I tell her, not really talking to myself, are what make stars real, you either have them or you don't, sink yours in (she does, meeting my lineage in tongues), but she's not listening, as she carries millions in images that heave all around her torso. I marvel. Nothing coy, just this collection of pristine atoms that heave, this wet goddess. We make love past the millions twice.

A small unframed painting of a many-armed Bodhisattva hangs over the bed where you imagine us wrapped, rapt I do not deny this rapture I make no enlightened claims I have no raft to float you Hard as it is for you to believe, no mastery came to me when this thing happened I have two arms, no more I am only marginally sentient I cannot save you or her The painting is better than us you're welcome to it

Because I fucked you too, dear,
I happen to know you're frigid. But I never saw you build a Bible out of bad sex, or proselytize your botched attempts at self-destruction before. Don't you think I look like James Dean? Aren't I sufficiently tortured? This leather coat, my cycle, all the accoutrements of urban hipster-ness; this is where I end, not with a bang but with a whimper. Kill or be killed, sister.

It's company of flesh and blood I need, your blonde head beneath, pillows scattered around us like confetti, memories of loneliness suddenly quaint as "thou," your feet in the air like hung mobiles, all the thousands of words left behind in throats overtaken by cries (awe before near-extinction), but you are not here, you are just a lack, something scrawled on a series of sheets, useful only to tell me that words have holes in them where nothing fits.

If she drinks herself to death in London, I'll cry like a bourgeois runt, I said. It's not just that you're dead— the kind of discipline that might affix itself (bourgeois runts have a bias towards life) to shots is— she chewed me out about this—wait, what did she say?

"Never forget: Cleopatra had a big nose, an ugly mug, took accidental drunken shits in bed. How do I know this? Because I was there!"

It's not just he's insane, he knows I have a big nose too, and all this just because he saw an ex crossing the Walnut Street Bridge, her nose up in the air where her legs used to be. How does he know this? Don't ask. I keep imagining Abington at night. The sense in the air is this: we can't be as far down as we are. The guy tending bar here (in this dreamed-of place) is an old friend; his angle on the world is, always, satire. But satire depends on people being willing to laugh. And if I still sit in my car in the parking lot of Abington High leering at girls, I can still laugh at that too. The Dairy Queen on Limekiln Pike remains the same. The girls still like ice-cream in the summer-time, right?

Everyone knows she has about two years to live. The blonde babe who runs shipments sits smoking at the Esquire Bar with a guy who still has the rat-tails he had at Cheltenham. How do you behave when you have two years to live? Well, you might try making your body a weapon. You might bop around shaking your hips so that no one might touch. Or fellating the pickle which comes with your sandwich. You might. But as you dance on nothingness, someone watching you is also watching his watch.

"They pulled a gun on him at the diner down the street. He was halfway through his burger. The Greeks who own the place didn't care. They got bought off a long time ago. I eat there for free sometimes. He probably eats there for free too. They don't play sides, that family. So if you want a place that's your place (as we used to have), you better have more money than the other guys, which we don't anymore. And it'll take you a year to nail this guy too."

Last time they met, she kept spitting on the cement outside the bistro like a sailor. A unique composite, I thought as I heard this, of two temperaments that just can't bite on earth. She keeps (he said) her panties on in bed. What did I tell him? I didn't. I spit on the cement outside the ship we happened to be sailing on. To spit: an abstract gesture, of the kind popular in the arts sixty years ago; it counts as "action" now.

"There is nothing shielded here, only once things are held within, interiors become future shields," yet we can only employ shields where the past is concerned. I happen to know the visionary deadness which permeates these images is too murky to give us any kind of present shield, & that means you too, darling, artist as ripe for decay as a February bramble, a tree in early March, this my garden, this gallery engulfed in a whirlpool—in falls Heidegger, back out again.

Things is tough. I need a break, pal. He threw the mitt and softball into the back seat of the station wagon. He thought of stopping at the Esquire Bar at Five Corners. The gang was going elsewhere, but he needed a break. They kept saying things to him about his wife. She wasn't just a little hoity-toity, but a psycho hose-beast. He thought he was moving up in the world. He stood by the station wagon. Everyone had left. It was the end of the goddamned season, too, he was married, a kid on the way, and he knew himself for a corpse. As an airplane flew over, he wished he had just jumped out of it. Things is tough.

A piece of road kill on the New Jersey Turnpike, scuttling into the city to steal from the old West Philly co-op, to cook lentils over a fire in woods somewhere near the Pine Barrens, this woman who deserted me for a man who could and has brought her three things: no children, abject poverty, and sterling marijuana. It's to be smoked as no last resort but as a means of being so wired into walking deadness that living out of an old Celica seems celestial as a canto of Byron's, perhaps the one she used to recite to me— "tis' but a worthless world to win or lose," and believe me, baby, you don't know the half of it, but you're not listening, you're stoned, you always were, oh the charm of you.